

Newsweek

Finding The Right Stuff

Sponsored By

NEWSWEEK

Updated: 12:51 PM ET Jan 12, 2008

The oft-exchanged phrase among tech journalists at last week's Consumer Electronics Show in Las Vegas, "more of the same," was a fair assessment of the gadgets on display. But we did dig up some products worth highlighting. The Neonode N2 mobile phone features an infrared-based touchscreen, making it more rugged than an iPhone or Palm. Seagate's D.A.V.E., a Bluetooth- and Wi-Fi-enabled pocket-size hard drive, allows users to access audio or video files from such diverse devices as iPhones, laptops and car stereos. But our favorite was Jook, a hardware add-on for MP3 players that permits you to broadcast music wirelessly to other Jook-enabled devices within 30 feet, or tag songs broadcast by other users for purchase the next time you sync your player with your PC. It's nice to share.

URL: <http://www.newsweek.com/id/91611>

© Newsweek Mag